Winter Exercise Tips for the New Year!

Source: WebMD, Medical News Today

Happy New Year! Make 2009 your best year yet, by committing to a healthier, new you! It may still be winter, but you can still get started on making a few changes in your life.

Establishing a healthier diet is a great resolution, but what about getting some exercise too? Exercise helps to build a strong immune system that will reduce the chances of developing a lung infection, a risk that is much higher during these winter months.

Most people who suffer from respiratory complications find it difficult to exercise in cold weather, but it is not impossible. Here are some tips that will help you stay active in the cold:

- Dress in layers underneath a windproof and waterproof outer layer. This helps the body to maintain warmth when exercising outside.

- Always wear a scarf over your nose and mouth to warm the air before you breathe in.
- Warm up with stretching and light activities before your exercise routine. Also, make sure to cool down.
- Everyday activities can be exercise! Try sweeping, mopping, vacuuming or even shoveling snow.
- Exercise indoor if the weather is too cold or icy. Some malls allow mall

CDC Panel Recommends that Smokers Receive Pneumonia Vaccine

Source: Los Angeles Times, October 23, 2008

For the first time ever, a government health panel has recommended that smokers receive a vaccination to protect themselves from pneumonia. The recommendation, which is expected to be formally adopted by the CDC, would be for all smokers ages 19 to 64 who scientists have found are at a higher risk for a pneumococcal infection.

Pneumonia bacteria live in the nose and throat, but can cause serious health issues if an infection occurs in the sinuses, lungs, blood or central nervous system. Studies show that smokers accounts for half of all invasive pneumonia cases among otherwise-healthy adults.

According to Dr. Lisa Jackson, senior investigator for the Seattle-based Group Health Center for Health Studies, "smoking makes it easier for the bacteria to get to the wrong place by damaging protective mucous membranes and tiny, hair-like cilia in the back of the nose and throat."

A single dose of pneumococcal vaccine can protect against 23 strains of pneumonia bacteria and have long been recommended for children, seniors and those with chronic diseases or weakened immune systems. The recommendation is significant in that it is the first time that smokers have been singled out for a certain type of vaccination. Health officials also added that they recommended that health officials simultaneously urge these individuals to quit smoking to reduce their risk as well.

Meet This Month's Better Breathers Speaker Cynthia Hawkins, Health Educator

Cynthia Hawkins, a health educator at the South Bay Children's Medical Center, has been working with the clinic since it started and has been working as a health educator for the last six years.

Enthusiastic about health, she teaches health education for teens in four different high schools and offers parenting and nutrition classes at the clinic. She is currently in the Stanford Physician's Assistants Program as well.

Dedicated to service to the community, Cynthia has extended her hand out to others across borders, by being involved in medical missions to Mexico.

Cynthia says, "I do what I do not to make money, I'm just passionate."

Cynthia is this month's Better Breathers Club speaker. So join us and learn more about her topic, Flu and the Family.
